Ladd Hirsch has practiced as a business trial attorney since 1983 helping his clients to resolve complex business disputes in the board room and in the courtroom. Ladd has represented business entities, individuals and families in litigation and arbitration matters in a broad array of industries, including manufacturing, banking, software, retail, real estate, oil and gas/energy, insurance, and video games. Ladd also represents clients in the Entertainment Industry (music and publishing) with claims, disputes and litigation. The business cases that Ladd has handled have presented claims for breach of contract/license, fraud, business defamation, negligent misrepresentation, theft of trade secrets, and non-compete violations. In these business cases, Ladd represents clients under a variety of fee structures, including hourly, contingent and hybrid fee arrangements, and he is also regularly retained by other attorneys to serve as a testifying expert witness on the subject of recoverable legal fees.

Ladd's practice is characterized by his tenacity and creativity in handling the prosecution and defense of significant litigation matters for businesses and investors. Since the late 1990's, Ladd has focused a significant portion of his practice handling Business Divorce matters and related litigation for majority owners and minority investors in private Texas companies. In these matters, Ladd prosecutes and defends claims against fiduciaries (officers, directors and private trustees), including claims for shareholder oppression, breach of fiduciary duty and shareholder derivative claims. Ladd has been named a Super Lawyer for 10 consecutive years by Texas Lawyer magazine, a Top 100 lawyer by Texas Lawyer Magazine, and D Magazine has listed him as a top business litigation lawyer in Dallas in multiple editions.
